

Co-design opportunity

Online Safety project

The South Australian Council on Intellectual Disability (SACID) are running some co-design workshops.

Co-design is when people work together on a new project.

SACID is running a new project to develop online safety resources for people with intellectual disability.

We are looking for 16 adults with intellectual disability around Australia to be co-designers in this project.

There will be 2 co-design groups of 8 people:

- 1 co-design group will meet in person.
- 1 co-design group will meet online.

There are 3 co-design workshops in each group.
You must be available to do all the workshops
dates.

You can join the co-design workshop in person if you live in Adelaide.
You can join the co-design workshop online if you live outside of Adelaide.

You will be paid $150 for taking part in each of the co-design workshops.

In the co-design workshops, we will ask you questions about your experiences with using your phone and the internet.

Your stories and feedback will help design online training resources to teach people with intellectual disability skills and information to be safer online.

You may hear some sensitive topics or stories in the workshops.

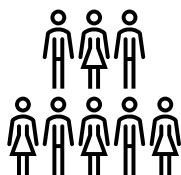

It can make people feel upset.
We will offer some support and resources.

We would like to thank ACCAN and the Commonwealth of Australia for funding this project.
